1975 International Guide

This is the first time the International Communication Division has compiled such a guide, which should be useful for numerous persons interested in international communication. It is hoped that future editions of this guide will be published, and that they will be expanded and improved.

Several Division members kindly provided listings for the Guide. They are named in the Guide's opening pages. The listings were compiled by Richard R. Cole of the University of North Carolina School of Journalism. Cole is 1974-75 head of the Division.

Sincere appreciation goes to Mr. Ernest Boykin and Gail Gregg, University of North Carolina students, for their help in editing the listings, and to Elaine Galden and Janice Scroggs for their help in typing them.

INTERNATIONAL GUIDE: SOME JOURNALISM/COMMUNICATION PROGRAMS, RESEARCH INSTITUTES AND CONTACTS AROUND THE WORLD

This International Guide does not pretend to be comprehensive.

It is merely a first attempt by the International Communication Division of AEJ at compiling names and addresses of journalism schools and programs, communication research institutes and other agencies, and numerous persons with interests in mass communication into a single convenient reference. Many readers will no doubt note important omissions. Apologies are due to the persons connected with schools and other entities omitted. Any volunteer effort such as this Guide, however, with its limitations of time and staff and virtually no financial backing, could hardly hope to cover the world comprehensively. If a need is seen for a publication of this type, it is hoped that future editions of the Guide will be published and that they will be improved vastly.

Even with its limitations, this Guide should prove useful to numerous persons in the field of international communication. The 80-page Guide contains more than 700 listings from more than 80 countries. Some listings came from other published directories, but most were provided in spring 1975 especially for this publication by the following International Communication Division members: Michael Bishop, George Garrigues, Shelton Gunaratne, William Hachten, Frank Kaplan, Kurt Kent, John Lent, Raymond Nixon, Robert Nwankwo, Elden Rawlings, Sam Riley, Gertrude Robinson, Ramona Rush and Henry Schulte. Sincere appreciation goes to all the compilers for taking time out from their busy schedules. Several compilers proofread their listings before publication, but time limitations precluded this for others.

This Guide should be used in conjunction with other published sources, for considerable information readily available in several directories is purposely omitted here. Furthermore, listings included here usually favor established journalism programs, for example, at the expense of newer ones. Because new journalism education and research programs are being established in many areas of the world, and because of changes in name, address and personnel of older programs, this Guide is out of date before it is published. Numerous errors almost certainly appear in the listings. Space is provided through the Guide for readers to write in corrections and make listings of their own. Although the errors may be blamed on the lack of time available, they are, of course, the responsibility of the editor.--R.R.C.

AFRICA*

*Most of the African listings below were provided by Prof. William A. Hachten of the School of Journalism and Mass Communication, University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wisconsin 53706 U.S.A.

Hachten, who has studied African mass media and journalism education for years, notes that there is considerable turnover in personnel in African journalism schools, and that some institutes and journalism programs tend to be ephemeral. The ones listed below tend to be rather well established and enjoy a certain sense of continuity, Hachten says.

Prof. Robert L. Nwankwo of the Department of Journalism, University of Rhode Island, Kingston, Rhode Island 02881 U.S.A., kindly provided listings also.

Additional journalism schools or programs are listed in "Training of Journalists: Africa," a pamphlet of limited distribution published in March 1973 by Unesco, Division of Development and Application of Communication.

ASIA*

*Most of the listings for Asia were provided by Prof. John A. Lent of the Department of Journalism, Temple University, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania 19122 U.S.A. Lent, who has published numerous works on Asian mass media, wishes to acknowledge these two sources for the listings:

Lent, John A., Asian Mass Communications: A Comprehensive Bibliography. Philadelphia: Temple University, School of Communication and Theater, 1975. 720 pp.

Asian Mass Communication Research and Information Centre (Amic): Asian Mass Communication Institutions: Teaching, Training and Research--A Directory. Amic: Singapore, 1973.

Other listings were provided by Prof. Shelton Gunaratne, who has been teaching at the School of Humanities, Universiti Sains Malaysia, Minden, Penang, Malaysia.

Several references on Asian media exist. Amic (Asian Mass Communication Research and Information Centre, 39 Newton Road, Singapore 11) and its Secretary General, Dr. Y.V.L. Rao, are quite active. Amic publishes Media Asia: An Asian Mass Communication Quarterly and Asian Mass Communication Bulletin, a newsletter, along with its other activities. Amic members receive free subscriptions to both publications. Individual and institutional membership rates were $8 U.S. and $40 U.S. in early 1975.

Among other useful publications is the annual directory--The Asian Press and Media Directory: Press, Radio, Television, Advertising, Public Relations, Government Information, Suppliers to Media--published by the Press Foundation of Asia, P.O. Box 1843, Manila, Philippines. Some listings from this directory are given below.

THE CARIBBEAN*

*Most of the listings for the Caribbean were provided by Prof. Elden Rawlings, 1974-75 Fulbright Professor of Mass Communication, University of the West Indies, Mona, Kingston 7, Jamaica. He notes that most of the academic programs prepare professionals for the mass media, but the organizations and individuals represent broader interests.

A few listings below were provided by Prof. Ramona R. Rush and Prof. Kurt Kent of the Communication Research Center, College of Journalism and Communication, University of Florida, Gainesville, Florida 32611 U.S.A.

Listings for Cuba and the Dominican Republic are in the section on Latin America.

LATIN AMERICA*

*Listings of the journalism schools under the Latin American countries below were provided by Prof. Raymond B. Nixon of the University of Minnesota School of Journalism and Mass Communication. Nixon is professor emeritus; his home address is 1578 Burton Avenue, St. Paul, Minnesota 55108 U.S.A.

Nixon, who has worked with Latin American journalism schools for many years, updated his listings for this directory. An earlier list was published in his 1971 Education for Journalism in Latin America monograph (Council on Higher Education in the American Republics, Institute of International Education, U.N. Plaza, New York City 10017).

The journalism schools are listed under each country, alphabetically first by city and then by school name. For Brazil only, the schools are grouped first by state.

*Listings of "Other Organizations With Communication Interests" and "Some Individuals With Communication Interests" follow the journalism schools under each country. These listings were provided by Prof. Ramona R. Rush and Prof. Kurt Kent of the Communication Research Center, College of Journalism and Communication, University of Florida, Gainesville, Florida 32611 U.S.A. Some organizations and individuals have no connection with journalism programs. Some are rather commercial, some rather political, but they have at least some interest in communication. Rush and Kent declare: "These preliminary listings are not intended to be complete or exhaustive. There may be some errors. We are in the process of contacting all the organizations and persons listed to verify the listings and determine the type and extent of their interest in communication. It is hoped that the preliminary edition of this directory will be utilized with all necessary caution, given the list's present limitations."
